Ten new Android banking trojans targeted 985 bank apps in 2023

This year has seen the emergence of ten new Android banking malware families, which collectively target 985 bank and fintech/trading apps from financial institutes across 61 countries.

Banking trojans are malware that targets people's online bank accounts and money by stealing credentials and session cookies, bypassing 2FA protections, and sometimes even performing transactions automatically.

In addition to the ten new trojans launched in 2023, 19 families from 2022 were modified to add new capabilities and increase their operational sophistication.
