American Express credit cards exposed in vendor data breach

American Express is warning customers that credit cards were exposed in a third-party data breach after one of its service providers was hacked.

In a data breach notification filed with the state of Massachusetts, American Express said that the breach occurred at one of its service providers used by their travel services division, American Express Travel Related Services Company.

"We became aware that a third party service provider engaged by numerous merchants experienced unauthorized access to its system," explains the data breach notification.
